History

"IF THESE FOUR WALLS COULD SPEAK, YOU'D HAVE A STORY"

Glen Campbell - Guitarist

The Keskidee Centre was envisioned by Oscar Abrams, a Guyanese architect and cultural activist, in the 1970s. A centre providing educational, social and cultural activities for a disadvantaged and primarily West Indian community in the borough of Islington.

The Keskidee Centre provided a thriving space for Afro-Caribbean arts and theatre to flourish in Islington. This was the first dedicated arts centre in Britain for the black community and would continue to be an important hub for African and Afro-Caribbean politics and arts well into the 1980s.

OUR FUTURE IS ALWAYS CONNECTED TO OUR PAST.

THE KESKIDEE CENTRE

Heritage

The Keskidee Centre was Britain's first arts centre for the black community, founded in 1971. Up-and-coming bands such as Misty in Roots and Steel Pulse also played at Keskidee, and in 1978 Bob Marley used the centre to make a video (in which seven year old Naomi Campbell took part along with other children) for his song "Is This Love?".

The Keskidee Centre has inspired a generation of thriving new artists. The name Keskidee relates to the beautiful great kiskadee bird and we decided to keep this tradition with our new logo. We also thought it was important to show the deep heritage in relation to music and this is shown through the musical ligatures in the logo typography.

A note from the developer

The opportunity to transform the Gifford Street site near King's Cross - one of Europe's major regeneration areas - really excited us. We immediately saw the scope to enhance this section of a historic London thoroughfare. Creating an outstanding place to live and work. The brief was challenging: a complex mix of uses on an urban site.

This was a rare opportunity to create a new piece of townscape within walking distance of King's Cross and Angel. We relished the opportunity to design on this truly historic road with modern luxury living.

Comprised of one, two and three bedroom luxury apartments. Set in the heart of London, situated minutes from King's Cross St Pancras Station and the stunning streets of Angel Islington, the development is impeccably located. King's Cross is London's fashionable new district. With vast open spaces and divine restaurants, residents could want for nothing more.
